Sohner Launches Intensive Bid For Democratic Assembly Votes

Possible isolation of the South Bay and Palos Verdes Peninsula from the rest of Los Angeles County was the warning sounded Saturday night by Charles Sohner, endorsed Democratic candidate for Assembly in the 46th District.

Sohner made the prediction as he addressed a group of fellow Democrats in Palos Verdes. The occasion was the monthly dinner of the Peninsula Democratic Club.

Sharing the platform with the youthful El Camino College professor was Glenn Wilson, California coordinator for the National Democratic National Convention. Wilson gave those present an insight into the behind-the-scenes preparations necessary to stage the gigantic political show.

SOHNER SOUNDED the "isolation" warning in a three-pronged attack on the "record of inaction" he claims for Incumbent Charles Chapel.

"Without better roads, freeways, and public transportation systems we run the risk of becoming a land-locked, traffic-blocked island," said Sohner.

He cited better planning, additional methods of finance and better legislative representation as the solution for the problem.

THE TWO OTHER needs of the Centinela-South Bay-Palos Verdes area according to Sohner are more job opportunity and security, and equal educational opportunities regardless of local district wealth.

"We don't need an assemblyman who votes against economic development and shows no concern for the need to attract new industry or strengthen existing enterprise," he said.

THE 31-YEAR-OLD candidate, billed by his supporters as "The dynamic young man with the bold new plan," summed up his political philosophy by saying:

"Basically, a successful party needs two things. It requires a general philosophy of government and the capacity to translate that philosophy into concrete programs beneficial to the people of a district."

HE EXPRESSED his faith that in the current campaign Democrats of the 46th will demonstrate both.

Sohner's primary campaign moves into high gear this week with the arrival of Mrs. Edmund G. Brown today. He will help greet the Governor's wife at a breakfast in Inglewood this morning and a luncheon in Rolling Hills in the afternoon.

Mrs. Brown has expressed a special interest in Sohner's campaign and is expected to enhance his chances for a strong vote in the June 7 balloting, according to political observers.

Flouridation of Community Water Supply Recommended

Californians were urged today by Dr. Malcolm H. Merrill, state health director, to take prompt community action to fluoridate their public water supplies as an effective weapon against tooth decay.

With high school graduation exercises taking place within the month, the director reported that nearly every high school senior in communities where the water supplies do not contain sufficient fluoride will have lost one permanent tooth and have, on the average, 12 decayed, missing or filled teeth.

PROMPT ACTION now to fluoridate the public water supplies in California would assure significantly improved dental health for the high school graduating class of 1975," declared Dr. Merrill.

He said the electors of three Northern California counties, Alameda, Contra Costa, and Marin, will have the opportunity in June to vote for fluoridation of their drinking water—a safe, effective and proven method of developing teeth which are highly resistant to decay.

"STUDIES conclusively show, the director said, "that the school-age population experiences 65 per cent less decay in any community where the water supply contains the optimum amount of fluoride, than do the youngsters in any community in which the water supply is deficient in this essential mineral."

He said that it would cost each person only pennies a year to adjust the level of fluoride to an amount beneficial to dental health. As an example, the director said the average cost per capita to fluoridate the water supply of San Francisco is six cents.

"COMPARE THAT with the cost of treating just one decayed tooth per child or adult a year," said Dr. Merrill.

In California, he reported, 19 communities are protecting the teeth of their young people by fluoridation of water supplies. These communities represent more than 1,200,000 people receiving the benefit of sufficient fluoride.

THE DIRECTOR declared, "Many children now growing up in California are deprived of lifelong health protection because their elders have failed to take the necessary action to adjust the fluoride content
